“Over the last decade, Jeffrey Ford has emerged as one of America’s master fantasists. Subtle, shrewd, stylish and intensely surprising, he is a leading exponent of what Michael Swanwick has termed hard fantasy: fantastic literature that is authentically original rather than safely conventional, that strikes to the surreal heart of human nature with a fresh, courageous novelty and flair.

This is amply evident in Ford’s highly regarded trilogy of novels concerning the Physiognomist Cley and other denizens of the Well-Built City: The Physiognomy (1997, winner of the World Fantasy Award), Memoranda (1999) and The Beyond (2001). His growing prowess was further attested by two books published in 2002, the major magic-realist historical thriller The Portrait of Mrs. Charbuque and the striking story collection The Fantasy Writer’s Assistant (Golden Gryphon Press).”
